Ji chang wook and lee min ho together

Hallelujah! Kim Soo-Hyun, Ji Chang-Wook and Lee Min-Ho will be discharged from their mandatory military duties in South Korea later this year. As fans anxiously await their comebacks, let’s head back in time to revisit some of the actors’ most iconic work — which are available right here on KOCOWA. Kim Soo-Hyun
Expected date of discharge: July 1, 2019
Notable role: Do Min-Joon, a real-life E.T. in “My Love From The Star.”
Why it’s good: Yes, the chemistry between Kim Soo-Hyun and his co-star Jeon Ji-Hyun (who plays spoiled movie star Cheon Song-Yi) is out of this world. But the series explores so much more: friendship, loyalty and sacrifice. This K-Drama does a beautiful job of transporting viewers back in time to the Joseon era. This is offset by modern-day Seoul, in all its glitz and glamour. Kim was just 25 when he tackled the role of the enigmatic Do Min-Joon, who has been patiently waiting to return to his planet for more than 400 years. It was a career-defining role that catapulted the young actor to international stardom. The role could’ve been robotic left in the hands of a less-skilled actor, but Kim effortlessly straddles the line between drama and comedy. There also are some awesome meta moments. The best is a cameo appearance by the adorable Bae Su Ji (Suzy), who tells him he looks just like her high school boyfriend, Sam-Dong. (Sam-Dong was Kim’s character in “Dream High,” where he starred opposite Bae.)
The open-ended series finale is bittersweet and not quite the happily-ever-after ending some fans had hoped for. But I felt it rang true to the story arc.
Ji Chang-Wook
Expected date of discharge: April 27, 2019
Notable role: The titular role in “Healer.”
Why it’s good: The interactions between Ji Chang-Wook and Park Min-Young is insanely good in this fast-paced, clever series that is equal parts espionage, action, and romance. It doesn’t hurt that Ji exudes smoldering sexuality, even when he’s disguised as a dweebish nerd. “Healer” is one of those rare dramas where the plot ramps up as the episodes progress. There is no downtime in this sterling series, so viewers are expected to keep up. One of the things I love about K-Dramas is that they touch on topics not often addressed in mainstream Korea. For instance, the issue of child abandonment and adoption are recurring storylines, where children are expected to forgive their parents’ choices. Both Ji and Park exhibit heartbreaking restraint portraying characters who refuse to be broken. On the action front, many actors can go through the motions and do a passable job at playing a hero. But like fellow actor Lee Joon-Gi, Ji really sells it and makes viewers believe that he is Healer. I loved the ending, which gave ownership to the characters played by both Ji and Park. If their characters were to have children, you just know their progeny will be badass!
Lee Min-Ho
Expected date of discharge: April 25, 2019
Notable role: Kim Tan in “The Heirs.”
Why it’s good: Though he initially won fame as a flower boy, Lee stands apart from many of his colleagues because he has a knack for lending gravitas even to lighter moments. “The Heirs” is a great example of this. I view Kim Tan as a continuation of Gu Jun-Pyo, the morally ambiguous character Lee portrayed in “Boys Over Flowers.” Once again, Lee plays a rich, handsome son of a chaebol who isn’t above bullying others. But here, his character has a conscience and a sense of right and wrong. When he asks new peers if he had ever bullied them in the past, you get the idea that Kim truly feels shame for having behaved like his other privileged classmates. Lee is one of South Korea’s biggest stars and “The Heirs” shows why he’s so beloved. Besides the obvious looks, he has a knack for making unrelatable characters relatable. Paired with Park Shin-Hye (who portrays his love interest Cha Eun-Sang), Lee adds subtle nuances to the rich boy/poor girl cliché that make his character compelling. And not for nothing, but I may or may not have hoarded a few coffee sleeves from Seoul’s A Twosome Place, because Lee’s face was plastered on them. It’s always fun to see which projects actors choose after their time in the military. Song Joong-Ki became more popular than ever with “Descendants of the Sun,” his first post-military series. What kind of roles would you like to see Kim Soo-Hyun, Ji Chang-Wook and Lee Min-Ho tackle next? You can watch all of my K-Drama picks on KOCOWA. Let me know in the comments section which actors you are waiting to be discharged from the military. Be sure to follow @GoAwayWithJae, where I tweet about all things Korean.
